THE MASS IN GRADUALS AND MISSALS AT THE MÉDIATHEQUE MUNICIPALE IN CAMBRAI
COMPARED WITH Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale de France, Réserve, Vélins 1600
(Printed Missal of the Use of the Cathedral of Cambrai)

TO NOTE: The manuscripts compared here represent the uses of Cambrai Cathedral and of the collegiate church of St. Pierre in Lille (MS 61), the latter a manuscript which came into the possession of the Cathedral in the thirteenth century. The manuscripts of Cambrai Cathedral do not necessarily contain the same mass propers. Some belonged to individuals, some to chapels, and some represent the use of the main choir—comments on this problem sent to me by Alejandro Planchart are included at the end of this table. A bibliography on these manuscripts would be too long to present here, but pertinent authors are Denis Muzerelle, Alejandro Planchart, Bruno Bouckaert, and Barbara Haggh(-Huglo). For MS B 59, MS 182, and MS B 186, only differences from F-Pn Vélins 1600 are given below.

COMMENTS OF ALEJANDRO PLANCHART (sent to Barbara Haggh-Huglo on March 11, 2013):

What would be most useful is a distinction between the liturgy in choro and the liturgy of the chapels. That can be a nightmare. Molinier has made a number of stabs at the origin of some of the missals, but I am not sure that he is right all of the time. By the middle of the century, I think it is possible to at least separate the liturgy in choro from that of the Chapel of St. Stephen (you have already done a good deal of that), and since that was the chapel of the small and grand vicars it is probably one of the most important distinctions, since the chapel probably had more polyphony than the choir, despite Du Fay's efforts in the 1440s, which I suspect did not outlive him in terms of the polyphonic propers in choro.

One litmus test that you can apply grosso modo is the mass for St. Anthony Abbot. The choir continued singing the mass Os iusti, and in the chapel of St. Stephen the mass Scitote quoniam was adopted. I no longer think that the mode 3 Scitote quoniam as a plainsong is by Du Fay. I still have not found a notated gradual with it. But the pattern with the different psalm verses now is clear, the introit with the Ps. Cum invocarem, a contrafact of Cibavit eos, turns up only in German MSS (the propers of TR 88 are thus probably German), the introit with the Ps. Et factum turns up only in French manuscripts. One chant MS that must have that plainsong is Lyon, BM, 525, fol. 148v, but I have not had a reply from the BM to my e-mail. That is a late 15th-c. Gradual, but I have found the introit with that Psalm verse in 14th-century missals (thus pre-Du Fay).

The case of the Missale parvum is very interesting; by this time, we are thinking of a diocesan missal, so if it reflects anything, it reflects the liturgy in choro. The weird St. Anthony mass at the end is a true votive mass, unlike that of CBM 184, and I suspect it reflects what you suspected are Burgundian traces, given the devotion of the Dukes to St. Anthony. I tend to agree with you that Du Fay's lost mass was probably intended for Burgundy. Notice that he did not endow it in his will, even though his manuscript had it together with the Requiem. It is also interesting that the echt-Franciscan cycle for St. Anthony of Padua is celebrated in the chapel of St. Stephen, and the manuscripts from the choir still have the common of confessors (when they have anything).
